DID YOU KNOW?...

The Pontifical Swiss Guard, commonly known as the Swiss Guard, is a small military corps responsible for the safety of the Pope and the security of the Apostolic Palace.

Beginning in the fifteenth century, Swiss guard units served at various European courts. They earned a reputation for their discipline, courage, and loyalty. Today, the Pontifical Swiss Guard of the Vatican is the only surviving Swiss guard corps in the world.

The official foundation date of the Pontifical Swiss Guard is January 22, 1506. On that day, a group of 150 Swiss soldiers entered the Vatican for the first time. They were welcomed and blessed by Pope Julius II, who had invited them to serve as his personal guard.

The daily duties of the Swiss Guard include guarding the Apostolic Palace, providing security during papal liturgies and public audiences, and carrying out internal responsibilities such as inspections, briefings, and training exercises. Members of the Guard also participate in recreational and community activities.

Although the Swiss Guard's ceremonial uniform has a distinctive Renaissance appearance, it was designed in 1914 by Commander Jules Repond. Drawing inspiration from sixteenth-century depictions of the Swiss Guard and Renaissance artistic styles, he created the colorful uniform that remains in use today.
